RUS colleagues,

I'm giving you the first review of this. Could you advise if it needs to go elsewhere too?

Thank you,
Rebecca

Hi Rebecca --

I just got Rian's out of office email that said you have taken over as Phil's Special Assistant. Congrats!

My name is Mike Fuchs and I work with Jake Sullivan in S/P.

The below request is from former President Clinton's office -- could you please check with the relevant EUR folks about the below issue and let me know if there are any concerns?

Many thanks, and nice to meet you.

Best,
Mike

Ami -

Please see below for a potential commitment opportunity to form a commitment that would involve members of the Russian government, specifically Duma and the Ministry of Health. Gary Cohen, an important member/advisor to CGI, has reached out to Amanda Chen re: a commitment idea that would involve the participation of three Russian government officials.

Becton, Dickinson, Co, a successful medical devices company in the US, has been asked by the Russian government to lend its standards/best practices for health worker safety to their health reform process, so that some of these best practices be written into law in Russia. It's very significant, because it's an example of a US company in expertise partnership with a foreign government.

Would the Russian officials (listed below) clear a vetting process? Can you let advise on the next steps and let us know if/when we're clear to move forward?

Thanks,

Lauren

Amanda,

I'm following up on our conversation yesterday regarding a potential commitment between BD and the government of Russia (Duma and Ministry of Health) on protection of healthcare workers from bloodborne pathogen exposures associated with occupational injuries.

We are working directly with these two sections of government (Duma and Health Ministry) to modify Russian law (via their health reform process) to achieve appropriate protections for health workers including implementation of universal precautions, injury surveillance and reporting, post exposure management, etc. This is a comprehensive process which is constructed along the lines of the healthcare worker safety bill that President Clinton signed into law in November, 2000 (I was in the Oval Office when this bill was signed into law).

I can describe more about this when we are in Chicago. For now, let me provide you with the names of the Russian government officials who we are working directly with:

Kolesnikov Sergey Ivanovich, professor of the Russian Academy of Medical Science. Russia State Duma Deputy, Deputy Chairman of the Committee of Health Protection
Garkavenko Vladimir Anatolevich, M.D., Phd, Expert of the Committee of Health Protection of the Russia State Duma (Kolesnikov's assistant)
Skvortsova Veronica Igorevna, professor, corresponding member of the Russian Academy of Medical Science, Deputy Health Minister of the Russian Federation

I have been personally involved in this effort and have met with these officials in Moscow and in the US. In fact BD helped arrange a visit of Duma member Kolesnikov and his assistant Garkavenko with members of the US Congress a few months ago as part of the early preparatory work.

This work is now in an advanced formative stage and the timing coincides well with the CGI Annual Meeting in September. Also, the Russian officials have expressed preliminary interest in partnering on a commitment that would be announced at CGI.

I think this and also the commitment we are discussing for Cervical Cancer represent two very interesting opportunities.

Please note that I also need to discuss these further within BD but I am assuming that I will get internal agreement here to move forward.

Best regards,

Gary
